CHAPTER 5—Solutions

FOUNDATIONS OF FINANCIAL REPORTING AND THE CLASSIFIED BALANCE SHEET

Discussion Questions

DQ1.	The balance sheet provides information about a company's resources (assets) and claims to those resources (liabilities and owner's equity). The income statement, statement of cash flows, and statement of owner's equity provide information about how the resources are used and claims to them are accounted for.
DQ2.	To record depreciation expense, it is necessary to estimate the useful life of the asset. To record the amount of unearned revenue that is now earned or the amount of accrued revenue on a project, it is necessary to estimate the amount of revenue earned.
DQ3.	Consistency in accounting applies only to the use of the accounting principles for presenting the financial information. It does not apply to the conditions that are represented in the financial statements. For example, changes in business operations or the economy may make financial information incomparable from year to year, even though the same accounting policies have been followed.
DQ4.	Illegal acts, such as stealing $1,000, are important to management even though for a multimillion-dollar business it might not be important to the auditors. It would not be material to the overall fairness of the financial statements.
DQ5.	They are classified as investments because they are not used in normal business operations and management does not plan to convert them to cash within the next year. Also, the investment category gives users some idea of resources the company may be able to draw on without disturbing the current business operations.
DQ6.	When calculating ratios to measure performance, analysts need benchmarks to measure whether the performance was good or bad. Past performance of the company is one measure, but a better measure is the financial performance of similar companies. This is done by examining industry averages.
DQ7.	The statement is false because neither measure is better than the other. However,
