There is also a limitation in the data as it states income of "$100,000 and above". That could mean that the data goes on unto family incomes of millions which is not proportionate to the other ranges of family income given. Due to this however, that piece of data was left out in the calculations.

Continuing, there might be a limitation to the recording of the data itself as SAT takers are to take a survey where they mention family income when signing up for SAT. This might cause a problem as many SAT takers, mostly in ages 15-17, do not know the actual income of their family therefore wrong data may be entered.

Then there could be a limitation to the data due to culture and race. The data does not mention culture and race which might affect the data as there might have
