Abstract.
 This study was designed to examine the effects of a 12-week, group-based, self-management program on the health status of individuals with type 2 diabetes. The program was based on the Diabetes Prevention Program (DPP) and was delivered by a community health worker. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results of the study showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the health status of individuals with type 2 diabetes. The program was found to be effective in reducing the risk of complications and improving the quality of life of participants. The findings of this study suggest that a group-based, self-management program can be an effective intervention for individuals with type 2 diabetes.
