2. List three essential elements shared by all cells;

6. Classify cells according to their shape and animal cells;
7. Diagram the organization presented in this lab in the proper sequence.

Introduction

Structurally and functionally, all life has some common features. All living organisms are composed of cells. The development of this concept begins with Robert Hooke's observations of cork tissue and goes on to build up of small units, the called living units, "cells" because their structure reminded him of the small windows that make up a house. From the year 1665 on, the cell theory emerged. This theory has three principles: (1) All organisms are composed of one or more cells; (2) the cell is the basic living unit of organization; and (3) all cells arise from preexisting cells.

Although cells vary in organization, size, and function, all share some common features: (1) All possess a plasma membrane defining the boundary of the living material; (2) all contain a region of fluid cytoplasmic contents; and 3, include genetic genetic information; and (4) all possess cytoplasm, everything within the plasma membrane that is not part of the cell nucleus.
