Integration is not a simple task and involves considerable planning and coordination. The following steps are suggested for the integration of the two systems:

1. Establish a steering committee to oversee the integration process.
2. Develop a detailed integration plan.
3. Communicate the plan to all stakeholders.
4. Implement the plan in a phased manner.
5. Monitor and evaluate the integration process.

The above steps are not intended to be a rigid framework, but rather a guide to help you plan and execute the integration of your two systems.

Despite a number of well-known theoretical and empirical problems, a few new papers in structural and econometric models seemed to bring the economic growth literature forward. The production sector is better specified, the technological progress is better modeled, and the role of government is better understood. The authors and editors are to be commended for their efforts.

The use of a validated questionnaire also ensured that the data collected was reliable and valid. The authors concluded that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire was a key factor in the success of the study.

Without necessarily denying the importance of a positive attitude, the authors point out a number of other factors that may be important in explaining the relationship between personality and the employment decision-making process. First, individuals' attitudes toward work and toward the employment decision-making process may be important. Second, age, education, family status, and social status may be important. Third, individuals' perceptions of the employment decision-making process may be important. The authors conclude that the relationship between personality and the employment decision-making process may be more complex than previously assumed.

Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 10-week, group-based, self-management program on the health status of patients with type 2 diabetes. The program was designed to improve patients' knowledge, self-efficacy, and health behaviors. The program was evaluated using a pretest-posttest design. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on patients' knowledge, self-efficacy, and health behaviors. The program also had a positive effect on patients' health status, as measured by hemoglobin A1c levels. The authors concluded that the program was effective in improving the health status of patients with type 2 diabetes.
