Light can be considered as a beam or ray that travels in straight lines if the medium is uniform (propagation) unless bent by reflection or refraction. Light rays travelling in the medium are the electromagnetic disturbance, part of it is reflected back into the same medium (scattering) for the second surface (2) the other part is refracted (transmission) part of the light will enter the medium, but the electromagnetic force, it's presence is made of the electric oscillation of electrons that are vibrating.

Law of Reflection - the same principle, stating that when a light ray strikes a mirror, the angle of incidence, θ_i , is equal to the angle of reflection, θ_r . The light ray is measured from the normal, the line off the surface. This is true for all surfaces, curved surfaces which light rays bounce off at various points, like those that make concave or convex mirrors. It also applies to optical or electron rays that reflect through materials, such as in a solid object or in a liquid or gas.
