

Enzymes and Cellular Regulation

What are the biochemical regulatory factors which regulate metabolism?

What?

Digestive enzymes are protein based biological catalysts that play a significant role in life. They help various substances react with each other, such as converting the food into glucose. They are also different from other biological catalysts as they work with water. These enzymes are made up of amino acids, which are linked to form long chains. These long chains form a 3D structure or folded structure. In this section, we will look at the general structure for two different enzymes. The digestive enzyme, lysozyme, is found in the human and horse-dung fluids in the small intestine. While pepsin breakdown proteins in the stomach.
