

3.4 MAXIMUM DISPLACEMENT

Here the control lever has been moved to its full stroke position. Pilot pressure reaches its minimum value. This decreased pilot pressure acts on piston (17), pushing it to extreme left position and coming into contact with the stopper. This movement causes the spool (24) to move to the left, and opens the passage between the large chamber and the tank port again, allowing the large chamber oil to be released to the tank. The rotor angle thus increases and approaches its maximum inclination. Now the rotor has reached its maximum inclination angle, so pump displacement is also at its maximum value. The movement of the rotor is transmitted through the feedback mechanism to the sleeve (23). The sleeve moves to the left, blocking the tank passage. As a result, movement of the rotor is stopped.
