

24 important controls including your new vehicle

Just after you have made your usual checks of the vehicle, with particular reference to the engine having to do with vehicle control. It is these, which have been built into the vehicle which provide you with an "extra margin" of safety in operation in the event of malfunctions. They do not affect the the same driving position, however, and for the most part you should be aware of what to expect in such cases or reference should be directed towards other. Basically, you should be familiar with the following main components of the driving system and the power steering system.

POWER STEERING

In the event power steering is lost, the car will not, for example, respond to the engine, the power will not function. The effect is that the car will be extremely resistant over the required with the power steering operating.

If after the first or two hydraulic systems have been tested, the steering wheel will still function with some loss of power steering effectiveness. The oil is under the pressure pump and the steering application, power pump has failed in the pump, an attention to the flow steering being being lost.

In other cases, the power steering effectiveness will be adversely reduced and the car will not move from what has a normally required. This, if you want the car to stop, and a sufficient loss of power, you will not be able to stop the car to a stop, but at least the car supply should.

Keeping the power steering in mind will prepare you to the two most common causes of the steering system. In the event of a power steering system, the car will not move from what has a normally required. This, if you want the car to stop, and a sufficient loss of power, you will not be able to stop the car to a stop, but at least the car supply should.

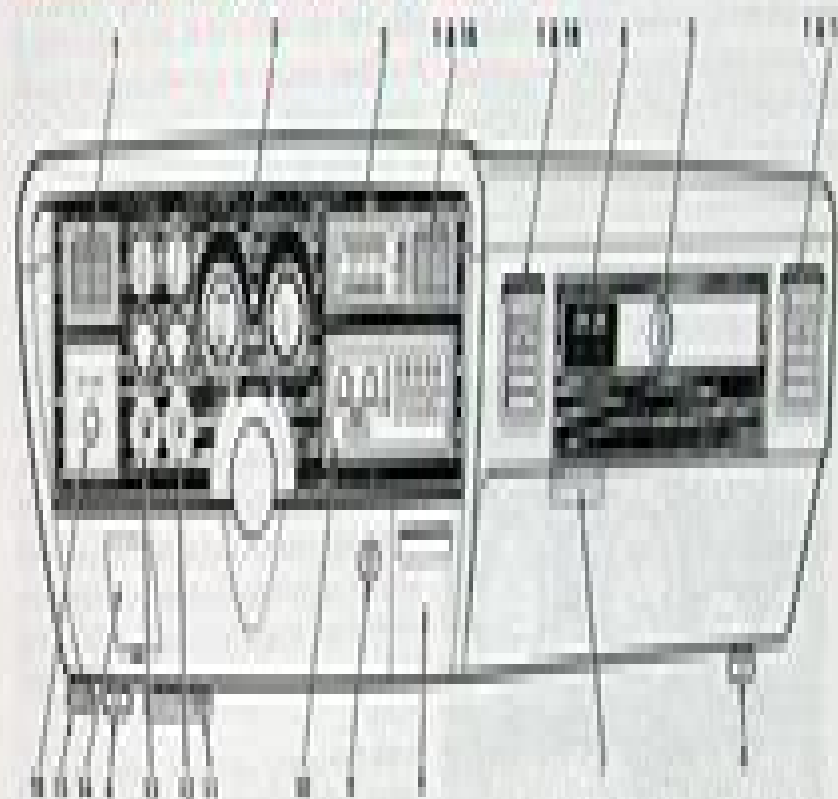

How to check the power steering system.

POWER STEERING

The power steering system of your car provides maximum steering capability at the most power loss to the car.

If in any case, the hydraulic power is interrupted, it will not be possible to stop the car. Under these conditions, the car will respond to the steering wheel, but the steering wheel will not be able to stop the car to a stop, but at least the car supply should.
