

Describe the relationship between media and politics.

Media is the main means of mass communication, through broadcasting, publishing and the internet regards collectively. It is the communication channels through which we disseminate news, music, movies, education, promotional messages and other forms of data.

Politics is the activities associated with the governance of a country or area, especially the debates between parties having power. Activities aimed at improving someones status or increasing power.

The relationship between media and politics is of influence and information. Politicians and the government use media to provide details about issues, candidates and government action. Media is important during elections or votes about issues. Politicians keep informed about the concerns, values and beliefs of their constituents through monitoring media trends.

It is discovered that news leads to political persuasion. The more the use of social media platforms for news sources, the more their political views will be affected.

Political power needs media attention in a complex society with an abundance of information. Media on the other hand needs information and credible sources inside the political establishment in order to produce news and information.

There are different views on the role of media in the political or rather democratic process.

- ✓ Media matters because it provides information to primarily rational voters. The rational learning model of media effects. In this model, information from the media makes votes more responsive to the quality of policy outcomes. This improves political selection and incentives and eventually, the quality of policy and welfare. The media may introduce some systematic biases, sometimes forcing politicians to work on the wrong issues and perhaps inducing pandering to voters' incorrect beliefs, but the role is primarily positive through improved political accountability.
- ✓ Media matters through propaganda and by exploiting cognitive mistakes that voters make. Key theories are those of media agenda setting, priming, and framing. The fears are that the media can manipulate voters to act against their own interest. For example, describing media framing, Entman (1993, p. 55) writes, "How can even sincere democratic representatives respond correctly to
