From Evidence to

Action Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2018-10-18 Cash transfers have become a key social protection tool in developing countries and have expanded dramatically in the last two decades. However, the impacts of cash transfers programmes especially in Sub-Saharan Africa have not been substantially documented. This book presents a detailed overview of the impact evaluations of these programmes carried out by the Transfer Project and FAO's From Protection to Production project. The 14 chapters include a review of eight country case studies: Kenya, Ghana, Ethiopia, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Lesotho, Malawi, South Africa, as well as a description of the innovative research methodologies, political economy issues, and good practices to design cash transfer programmes. The key objective of the book is to enhance the understanding of these development programmes, how they lead to a broad range of social and productive impacts, and also of the role of programme evaluation in the process of developing policies and implementing programmes.

The impact of Ethiopia's Productive Safety Net Programme on the nutritional status of children: 2008-2012 Berhane, Guush, Hoddinott, John F., Kumar, Neha, 2017-02-03 Ethiopia's Productive Safety Net Programme (PSNP) is a large scale social protection intervention aimed at improving food security and stabilizing asset levels. The PSNP contains a mix of public works employment and unconditional transfers. It is a well targeted program; however, several years passed before payment levels reached the intended amounts. The PSNP has been successful in improving household food security. However, children's nutritional status in the localities where the PSNP operates is poor, with 48 percent of children stunted in 2012. This leads to the question of whether the PSNP could improve child nutrition. In this paper, we examine the impact of the PSNP on children's nutritional status over the period 2008-2012. Doing so requires paying particular attention to the targeting of the PSNP and how payment levels have evolved over time. Using inverse probability weighted regression adjustment estimators, we find no evidence that the PSNP reduces either chronic undernutrition (height for age z scores) or acute undernutrition (weight for height z scores). While we cannot definitively identify the reason for this nonresult, we note that child diet quality is poor. We find no evidence that the PSNP improves child consumption of pulses, oils, fruits, vegetables, dairy products, or animal source proteins. Most mothers have not had contact with health extension workers, nor have they received information on good feeding practices. Water practices, as captured by the likelihood that mothers boil drinking water, are poor. These findings, along with work by other researchers, have informed revisions to the PSNP. Future research will assess whether these revisions have led to improvements in the diets and anthropometric status of preschool children in Ethiopia.

Social protection and resilience: The case of the productive safety net program in Ethiopia Abay, Kibrom A., Abay, Mehari Hiluf, Berhane, Guush, Chamberlin, Jordan, 2021-12-31 Improving household resilience is becoming one of the key focus and target of social protection programs in Africa. However, there is surprisingly little direct evidence of the impacts of social protection programs on household resilience measures. We use five rounds of panel data to examine rural households' resilience outcomes associated with participation in Ethiopia's Productive Safety Nets Program (PSNP). Following Ciss and

Barrett 2018 we employ a probabilistic moment based approach for measuring resilience and evaluate the role of PSNP transfers and duration of participation on households resilience We document four important findings First although PSNP transfers are positively associated with resilience PSNP transfers below the median are less likely to generate meaningful improvements in resilience Second continuous participation in the PSNP participation is associated with higher resilience Third combining safety nets with income generating or asset building initiatives may be particularly efficacious at building poor households resilience Fourth our evaluation of both short term welfare outcomes and longer term resilience suggests that these outcomes are likely to be driven by different factors suggesting that optimizing intervention designs for improving short term welfare impacts may not necessarily improve households resilience and vice versa Together our findings imply that effectively boosting household resilience may require significant transfers over multiple years National safety nets programs that transfer small amounts to beneficiaries over limited time horizons may not be very effective

Estimating multidimensional development resilience Lee, Seungmin, Abay, Kibrom A., Barrett, Christopher B., Hoddinott, John F., 2024-09-09 Resilience measurement has received substantial attention over the past decade or so Existing measures however relate resilience to a single well being indicator This may be problematic in contexts where households face deprivations in multiple dimensions We explore how sensitive estimates of household level resilience are to the specific well being indicator used and show that measures are only weakly correlated across different reasonable indicators based on expenditure based poverty dietary diversity and livestock asset holdings We then introduce a multidimensional resilience measure integrating the probabilistic moment based resilience measurement approach of Ciss and Barrett 2018 with the multidimensional poverty measurement method of Alkire and Foster 2011 Applying the new method to household panel data we show that univariate and multidimensional resilience measures can yield varied inferences on the ranking of households as well as potential impact of development interventions

Targeting social transfers in pastoralist societies:

Ethiopia's productive safety net programme revisited Lind, Jeremy, Sabates-Wheeler, Rachel, Hoddinott, John F., Taffesse, Alemayehu Seyoum, 2018-09-20 In the Ethiopian highlands the Productive Safety Net Programme PSNP is a successful social safety net intervention in terms of both targeting and impact By contrast existing studies situated in the country's lowland Afar and Somali regions suggest that PSNP targeting is beset with difficulties This is deeply concerning given that these predominantly agro pastoral and pastoral areas have some of the country's highest levels of poverty and food insecurity and that there is an absence of viable livelihoods outside of pastoralism in these localities In this paper which draws on three rounds of household survey data from 2012 2014 and 2016 we show that there has been no meaningful improvement in targeting performance since 2010 We assess five explanations for this resources and under coverage the involvement of traditional leaders in targeting insufficient training attitudes of program implementers and transparency adducing that norms regarding fairness and a lack of transparency are the most likely explanations for continued poor targeting The PSNP experience calls into question the effectiveness of technocratic fixes as well as the appropriateness of targeting transfers in pastoralist societies Industrial Communication Technology Handbook Richard
