

RESEARCH OBJECTIVES THAT HAVE INSPIRED THE STUDY

10. Statistical significance – determining whether observed differences among the treatment and control groups are statistically significant. This is done by using statistical tests that compare the means of the two groups. The most common test is the t-test, which compares the means of two groups. The results of the t-test are then compared to a critical value to determine if the difference is statistically significant.

1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to define the problem. This involves identifying the symptoms of the problem and determining the scope of the problem. Once the problem has been defined, the next step is to identify the causes of the problem. This involves identifying the factors that are contributing to the problem and determining the underlying causes of the problem. Once the causes of the problem have been identified, the next step is to develop a plan to address the problem. This involves identifying the actions that need to be taken to address the problem and determining the resources that will be needed to implement the plan. Once a plan has been developed, the next step is to implement the plan. This involves taking the actions that have been identified in the plan and monitoring the progress of the plan. Finally, the last step in the process is to evaluate the results of the plan. This involves determining whether the plan has been successful in addressing the problem and identifying any lessons learned from the process.
