D. Answer these.

1. Why does a country need a constitution?

A country needs a constitution as it sets up rules that everyone, including the government, must follow. It provides a clear structure for how the country is governed, having a constitution is a way of ensuring that those who govern a country do not do just what they please.

2. 'India is a secular country.' What does this mean?

When we say "India is a secular country," it means that India treats all religions equally and does not favour any religion over others. The government does not support or promote any particular religion, people are free to follow any religion they choose.

3. When can some of the fundamental rights of a person be taken away?

If people break laws, the courts can take away some of their fundamental rights. For example, people can be jailed for robbery. This takes away some of their freedom.

4. What does exploitation mean? How are children protected against exploitation?

Exploitation means treating someone unfairly to benefit from their work or actions.

Two ways children are protected against exploitation in India are:-

- i. Child Labour Laws: In India, there are strict laws against child labour. These laws make it illegal for children below the age of 14 to work in factories, mines, or any hazardous jobs.
