Case Study 1: Health care systems and settings

Jessica, a medical assistant, is taking medical history from Mr. Browning.

Mr. Browning explains that he took his morning medication as usual and then went outside to prune his hedges. Upon going inside for lunch, he noticed a red, itchy rash on his right leg. Jessica documents this in the chart for the provider.

QUESTION 1 What are some additional questions that the medical assistant should ask to document the history of this episode a little more?

Answers will vary.

- "What medications did you take this morning?"
- "Have you experienced similar reactions in the past after taking your medications or when working in your garden?"
- "Did you notice any additional symptoms other than the itchy rash on your lower right leg, such as swelling, hives, or breathing difficulties?"

Following the screening, Mr. Browning asks if Jessica can suggest an over-the-counter medication to help with his rash. Jessica knows that the doctor normally prescribes diphenhydramine for local reactions.

QUESTION 2 What response would be most appropriate based on this scenario?

- A. "The doctor normally prescribes over-the-counter diphenhydramine for these types of rashes."
- B. "The doctor should be able to provide an answer to your question following her examination."
- C. "I can't prescribe medications because I am only a medical assistant."
- D. "You will need to have extensive testing to determine the cause of your rash before a treatment can be established."

The correct answer is B. Prescribing and recommending medications is outside the scope of practice of the medical assistant.

After thinking about his symptoms and possible contributors to his symptoms, Mr. Browning states that he has never had any previous reactions to his current medications but has had
