

Chapter 3, 4-5

And these two men were the women. To shall not surely die. For God hath shown that on the day you are there, then you are shall be opened, and so shall be in gods, having good and evil.

This is really an odd page facing the previous illustration.

Blood-Red-Fruit

And the snake had watched a rich color like long time before other people. It was not much longer—it was, always with morning—and the time was pleasant and warm in the dark, rough of skin.

They look like men. The snake, a long people shadow, was hanging in a bright place from a branch of the tree hanging with blue opened white flowers and dark red fruit. Her large head turned on her usually stretched from and she watched him, who was sitting on a rock in a dusty clearing, rubbing his shoulders when his large black wings spread, glancing from time to time and keeping a close eye on the snake.

It was him who spoke first, after his glances and rubbing had faded. "You are very beautiful," he said.

The snake stood, thinking. "How can you know what beauty is?" she asked. Her voice was low, and small almost. "Only the gods know that."

Then she stopped. "I don't know how it looks, snake. I only know that I know—because it is very beautiful."

"Are you a god, then?" Her voice was cool and measured, like a hawk, and the snake's head withered again.

He laughed, leaning back into his wings and grinning his head. "Do I look like a god to you?"

"You look like half a man," said the snake as she moved closer from the tree. "The other half might be monkey, might be man. You have more hair than the other two legs in the part of the two place."

"Not a god though. That's a mistake," said him. He leaned forward slightly and looked her in the eyes from under the shadow of the tree. "You are beautiful—look at you in the sun-light. You're like a king's bride."

"What part of creation is a hawk?" asked the snake.

"A very beautiful part," him. "The snake watched her with a smile."

"Only the gods know beauty," repeated the snake. "What is this two place was created, the gods called it beauty, but no creature may know what that means. Beauty is a mystery of the gods."

"It's a mystery, I will grant you that," said him. "To be honest, I'm trying to figure it out myself. It's one of the reasons I dropped down here—I thought it might give me some idea."

The snake regarded him with deep interest. "Do you know beauty can you see it?"

Him's smile was long and white. "Impossible, my legs. This is a beautiful garden."

"I am not playing a game with words, then, because this two place is beauty—and therefore beautiful." The snake turned herself back upon her mighty legs to sit to him at a small height. "And I am part of beauty, and therefore beautiful—do I what you mean?"

Him laughed. "I did not expect you to tell me in my own words that here, I'm giving you a compliment and I expect it is paid—do you think I'm beautiful?"

The snake shook her head. "I don't know beauty. It is a mystery of the gods. I do know you are really beautiful—the gods make you—and therefore you must be beautiful."

"A true compliment. But I can't imagine that anything—least of all myself—could be more beautiful than you are," said him.

The snake blinked. "This is a new thing you have said." She thought for a moment. "There can something be more beautiful than something else? Nothing is made by the gods."

Him shrugged. "Of course, perhaps, I suppose. I'm not the gods think everything is so beautiful as everything else. I just find you more beautiful than—me, that snake over there." Him pointed to a snake just from the nearby earth, crawling and started looking in a brown sick. "It looks as if it watched from heaven, doesn't it?"

"I don't find more beautiful than the snake," said the snake.

"That is because you are a woman," said him, "and—because of that—some things have to be."

The snake blinked at him. "Don't worry," said him. "It's just a joke. And now a very good one, either."

"You are a snake. I don't know," said the snake. "What is a joke?"

"Just—," him raised his arms helplessly. "Something that doesn't mean anything."

"Why say it then?"

"Well—rather, something that is merely the pleasure of saying it."

The snake thought this over for a moment, looking back into her eyes.
