CHAPTER 2

RESEARCH DESIGN AND DATA SOURCES

CHAPTER OUTLINE

Research Design

pg 54

A research design delineates what data to collect and how to collect them. It must specify:

- the type of information to be collected (consistent with the study objectives)
- possible data sources
- the data collection procedure (accurate, economical and timely)

Types of Research

Three sometimes overlapping streams of marketing research:

1. exploratory research—information to improve research
2. conclusive research—information to help choose between courses of action
3. performance-monitoring research—feedback on chosen course of action

Exploratory Research

Exploratory research helps determine the “space” of possible marketing actions by facilitating problem recognition and definition. It is appropriate when the research objectives include:

1. identifying problems or opportunities
2. gaining perspective on the nature of the problem
3. gaining perspective on variables involved
4. establishing priorities
5. formulating possible courses of action
6. identifying possible pitfalls in doing conclusive research

Conclusive Research

Conclusive research aims to narrow the field of strategic alternatives down to one. It can be sub-classified into descriptive research and causal research.

Descriptive Research

Descriptive research characterizes marketing phenomena and associations between them without testing for cause-and-effect relationships. Descriptive research is appropriate for:

1. determining the frequency of occurrence of marketing phenomena
2. determining the degree to which marketing variables are associated
