What is a database?

Structured representation of data according to a model

Structure is defined by a schema (data model)

It works as a database family (rows in database tables)

Database is a collection of data that is organized in a way that it can be accessed and managed efficiently

Database is a collection of data

Database is a collection of data that is organized in a way that it can be accessed and managed efficiently

When creating a database, you need to define the structure of the data that will be stored in the database. This is done by creating a schema, which is a collection of tables and their relationships.

Example: a database for a library. It would have tables for books, authors, and borrowers.
