

PROTEIN SYNTHESIS

TRANSLATION

1. Translation is the process by which the genetic code is used to synthesize a protein. It occurs in the cytoplasm of the cell, where the mRNA is translated by ribosomes. The ribosome is a complex of proteins and RNA that reads the mRNA and assembles the amino acids into a polypeptide chain.

2. During translation, the ribosome moves along the mRNA, reading the codons and adding the corresponding amino acids to the growing polypeptide chain. The amino acids are brought to the ribosome by tRNA molecules, which have anticodons that pair with the mRNA codons. The polypeptide chain grows as the ribosome moves along the mRNA.

THE GENETIC CODE

"One codon at a time"

1. Biology began to decipher the genetic code in the 1950s and 1960s. The first breakthrough came when the first codon was identified: UUU, which codes for the amino acid phenylalanine.

2. Subsequently, during the 1960s, researchers began to decipher the genetic code. The first breakthrough came when the first codon was identified: UUU, which codes for the amino acid phenylalanine.

3. The genetic code is a set of rules that defines how the information in a DNA sequence is used to synthesize a protein. It is a code that is shared by all living organisms.

"One gene - one protein"

1. One gene codes for one protein. This is the basic principle of the genetic code. Each gene is a segment of DNA that contains the instructions for making a specific protein.
