As a financial manager, if the gross margin on sales of 10% translates to a 10% contribution to gross income, then you can use simple mathematics to quickly determine if you can afford to buy the new machine. All you need to do is get out a contribution margin statement and bring your calculations into a formula:

$$A \text{ Machine} = (\text{contribution margin contribution} - \text{depreciation}) \times \text{quantity of units to be sold} - \text{fixed costs}$$

As a result, if a new machine contribution (adding and subtracting the amount of costs to be subtracted) is negative, it is not a good investment. If it is positive, it is a good investment.
