Frank Mildmay Frederick Marryat,2016-02-03 Chapter One These are the errors and these are the fruits of mis spending our prime youth at the schools and universities as we do either in learning mere words or such things chiefly as were better unlearned Milton My father was a gentleman and a man of considerable property In my infancy and childhood I was weak and sickly but the favourite of my parents beyond all my brothers and sisters because they saw that my mind was far superior to my sickly frame and feared they should never raise me to manhood contrary however to their expectations I surmounted all these untoward appearances and attracted much notice from my liveliness quickness of repartee and impudence qualities which have been of much use to me through life I can remember that I was both a coward and a boaster but I have frequently remarked that the quality which we call cowardice in a child implies no more than a greater sense of danger and consequently a superior intellect We are all naturally cowards education and observation teach us to discriminate between real and apparent danger pride teaches the concealment of fear and habit render us indifferent to that from which we have often escaped with impunity It is related of the Great Frederick that he misbehaved the first time he went into action and it is certain that a novice in such a situation can no more command all his resources than a boy when first bound apprentice to a shoemaker can make a pair of shoes We must learn our trade whether it be to stand steady before the enemy or to stitch a boot practice alone can make a Hobby or a Wellington
