THEORY

Essentially the B-H loop display equipment comprises of a pair of air cored colls, the primary and secondary windings being so arranged that fittle or no coupling can occur unless a metallic core is inserted into the colls. if an alternating current is applied to the primary coil, the current through this coil may be taken as proportional to the magnetising force H and the voltage induced across the secondary as proportional to the flux stration of dB/ct where N is the number of turns. However, the introductions of a capacitance resistance circuit across the secondary winding integrates the relation dilutal and thus provides a supply proportional to 8 or N. Since the relationship between 8 and H varies for different Ferro-magnetic specimens, it is possible to contrast and compare the magnetic properties of various materials.

CIRCUIT DETAILS

Fig. 1 illustrates the basic grout. It will be seen that the current through the primary coil is made to pass prough a resistor R and that the potential difference thus produced is used to maintain the horizontal scan in the oscilloscope tube. The values of RI and the applied e.m.f. will depend upon the degree of amplification which the oscilloscope can achieve in its horizontal input circuit. For the cheapest oscilloscope where-ever without any horzontal amplifier, the display can be achieved with an applied e m t. of nearly 80V and R1 of 1000 chms. But for an oscilloscope which provides sufficient horizontal amplification the e.m.f. value could be reduced to a value as low as 6 votes.

The resistor capacitor network R4. RV3 and C2 makes up the integrator circuit and the time constant of his circuit can be adjusted by varying RV3. In the same way, the line constant of a phase correction network RV2 and C1 can be varied by adjustment RV2. In this respect, these should be identical and to achieve this, it is recessary to take into account the impedance of the X-input circuit of the oscilloscope. However, even the most timple instruments exhibit an impedance of the order of 2M ohms and the value of RV2 has been calculated in his assumption. Additional components used contains power ON-OFF switch, a fuse and a neon indicator sperated from a L.T. Winding of the transformer. The transformer has been given different voltage tapings unresponding to 6V, 10V, 20V, 40V and 60V to allow the display unit to feed any oscilloscope either with no haricontal amplification or with large horizontal amplification.
