Quine, Jeffrey Sayer, David Leslie Hawksworth, 2010-07-23 1 Plantation forests and biodiversity Oxymoron or opportunity Forests form the natural vegetation over much of the Earth's land and they are critical for the survival of innumerable organisms The ongoing loss of natural forests which in some regions may have taken many millennia to develop is one of the main reasons for the decline of biodiversity Preventing the further destruction of forests and protecting species and ecosystems within forests have become central issues for environmental agencies forest managers and governments In this difficult task science has an important role in informing policy and management as to how to go about this So how do industrial and other plantation forests fit into this Plantation forests comprised of rows of planted trees that may be destined for pulp or sawmills after only a few years of growth appear to have little to contribute to the conservation of biodiversity Yet there is more to this than meets the eye of the casual observer and there are indeed numerous opportunities and often untapped potential for biodiversity conservation in plantation forestry With plantation forests expanding at a rate of approximately three million hectares per year it is crucial to understand how plantations can make a positive contribution to biodiversity conservation and how the potentially negative impacts of this land use can be minimised That is the topic of this book Practical Handbook of Soil, Vadose Zone, and Ground-Water Contamination J.
