1. what is communication?

Communication is an integral component for social interactions and personal growth. It has helped man evolve, since without interactions, it is not possible for growth and progress. Communication happens even without language, in the form of graffiti, painting, distinctive sounds, gestures and of course body language. Etymologically, the word communication originally meant "to share publically". Today the word has a more precise meaning; sharing knowledge and information. Communication therefore enables people to share ideas, messages and thoughts through various mediums that range from verbal, visual, nonverbal or over channels perpetrated the mass media or the internet. Communication theory was proposed by SF Scudder in 1980 and it states that all living beings communicate, although the modes of communication are different. Theories of communication work around the concept that it is the process of passing information from one person to another with the help of some medium. The person who initiates a chain of communication is the sender and the person who receives it is the receiver. Communication is a two way process where a message is sent by the sender, received by the receiver, interpreted and decoded by the receiver and a suitable response given back to the sender. The feedback given by the receiver completes the loop which continues as a process of coding, sending, receiving, de-coding and sending a feedback.

2.8 Major components of communication

Communication comprises of 8 major components, which are the objects of study of communication theory. These are interdependent and are considered as basic elements of any communication process.

a. Source

Source is that produces a message.

b. Sender

Sender refers to transmitter that codes the message.

c. Channel
