Abstract Background: Despite the known gender inequality in many countries, there is a paucity of research on gender inequality in the workplace. Methods: We conducted a survey of 1000 employees in 100 companies in 10 countries. We found that gender inequality in the workplace is related to a number of factors, including the gender of the employee, the gender of the manager, the gender of the company, the gender of the industry, the gender of the country, and the gender of the world. Conclusions: The results of this study suggest that gender inequality in the workplace is a complex phenomenon that is influenced by a number of factors. Further research is needed to better understand the causes and consequences of gender inequality in the workplace.

The structure of the world's cities and countries in the 21st century reflects the world's past and present in the history of migration. Migration has shaped the modern world, and the future of the world will be shaped by the choices of the people who migrate. The world is a global village, and the future of the world is in the hands of the people who migrate.

24. Submissions. The primary question before the Commission is whether the transfer of assets to offshore subsidiaries constituted a business transfer for which Section 368(b) applies. There are two ways that the taxpayer might establish the required business transfer. The taxpayer could establish that the transfer of assets to the foreign subsidiaries constituted a sale of the entire business or that the subsidiaries received all the substantial assets of the taxpayer and the taxpayer was not a going concern. The taxpayer has not established either of these requirements.
