

A People's History of the United States Howard Zinn

Chapter 1: "Columbus, the Indians, and Human Progress"

1. According to Zinn, what was Columbus's primary motivation in finding a "new" route to the Indies?

Zinn's main argument was to depict history from the perspective of the oppressed people rather than the victors. He interpreted all political events as battles.

2. According to Zinn, how is Columbus's journey related to the "discovery" of America?

He said that Columbus was motivated by a desire for wealth and power, and that his voyage was primarily a quest for gold and glory, not a quest for knowledge or discovery.

3. What is Zinn's main criticism of the traditional view of Columbus's voyage?

Zinn states that the traditional view of Columbus's voyage is a myth, and that the real story is one of exploitation and oppression. He argues that the voyage was a quest for gold and power, not a quest for knowledge or discovery.

4. What impact did Columbus's voyage have on the indigenous people of the Americas?

He states that the voyage had a devastating impact on the indigenous people of the Americas. He argues that the voyage led to the destruction of their culture and society, and that the indigenous people were treated as slaves and forced to work on the plantations.

5. Internally, how does Zinn's argument challenge the traditional view of Columbus's voyage?

Indigenous people were portrayed as primitive and uncivilized, and the voyage was portrayed as a quest for knowledge and discovery. Zinn's argument challenges this view by arguing that the indigenous people were not primitive, and that the voyage was a quest for gold and power, not a quest for knowledge or discovery.
