Human Reproduction

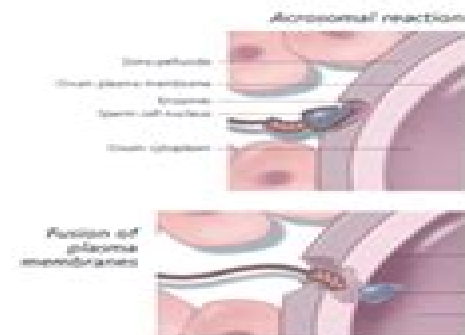

Human reproduction

Human reproduction is sexual reproduction involving male and female reproductive cells called gametes. The reproductive system includes organs called gonads that produce gametes and hormones; ducts for transport, storage and transportation of gametes; accessory organs and glands for fluid secretion; and internal genitalia. Reproduction is regulated by hormones produced by the gonads, the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. Fertilisation involves the introduction of sperm into the vagina. The sperm travels through the female reproductive tract until it encounters an ovum, a female sex cell. Fertilisation can then take place.

Male reproductive system

The adult male reproductive system is a complex of two primary external structures, the testes and the penis. The testes are divided into thousands of tiny compartments or lobules containing seminiferous tubules, tightly coiled structures where sperm formation takes place. The testes are situated in a sac called the scrotum, which provides support and regulates the position of the testes relative to the body. The scrotum moves closer to the body when it is cold to conserve heat and further away when it is warm to cool the testes. The testes are also responsible for producing and secreting male sex hormones, which regulate the development of male secondary sex characteristics.

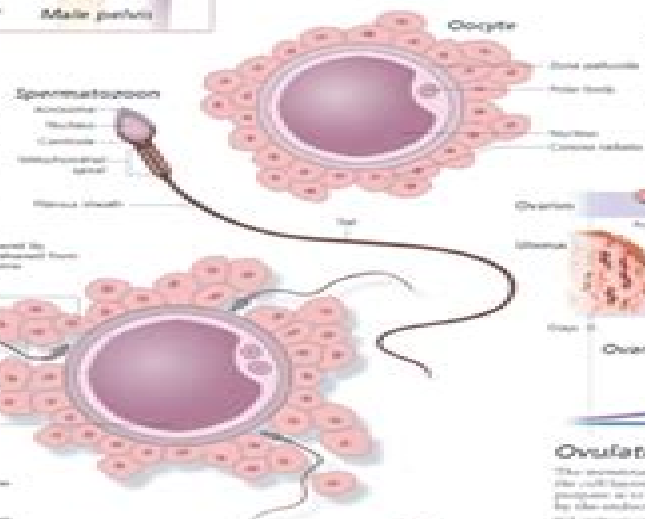

Fertilization

The upper portion of the vagina leads to the vaginal canal for fertilisation. Millions of sperm travel through the female reproductive tract, ultimately only a few reach the egg. When a sperm meets the egg, the sperm's head penetrates the egg's outer membrane. The sperm's head contains the genetic material of the sperm. When the head penetrates the egg, the sperm's head releases its genetic material into the egg. The egg's outer membrane dissolves, the chromosomes of the egg and sperm combine, and a fertilised egg, or zygote, is formed. The zygote then divides, producing 2 identical cells called blastomeres.

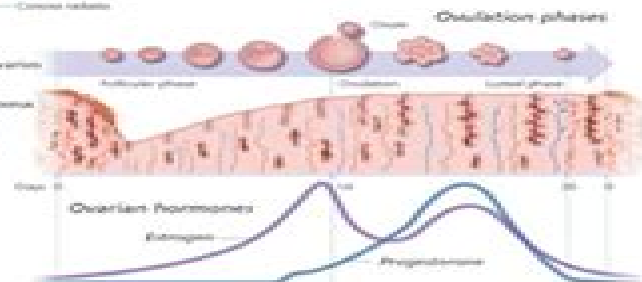

Female reproductive system

The internal structures of the adult female reproductive system include the vagina, uterus, ovaries and fallopian tubes. These structures form a pathway allowing the release of an egg cell, fertilisation, its growth and delivery of a developed fetus. The vagina is a muscular canal that leads from the uterus to the outside of the body. It is the lower part of the uterus. It channels through the cervix allows the passage of sperm and menstrual discharge. The uterus is a hollow pear-shaped organ with muscular walls that contract during childbirth. The inner lining of the uterus is the endometrium, which sheds during each menstrual cycle in preparation for implantation by a fertilised egg. This lining is shed during menstruation if fertilisation does not occur.

The ovaries, located on each side of the uterus, are responsible for producing ova as well as the female sex hormones estrogen and progesterone. Estrogen is responsible for the development of the female reproductive structures, sexual characteristics, and breast development. Progesterone prepares the uterus lining for implantation of a fertilised egg and is necessary for breast milk production. The ovaries are connected to the uterus by the fallopian tubes, narrow ducts that provide a passageway for the egg to reach the uterus.

Ovulation & the menstrual cycle

The menstrual cycle refers to the sequence of events that occurs in the endometrium, the cell lining lining the uterus. The cycle normally lasts approximately 28 days. The purpose is to prepare the uterus for possible pregnancy. The menstrual cycle is governed by the endocrine system. If fertilisation does not occur, declining estrogen and progesterone levels initiate menstruation and the cycle begins again.
