

A roux-en-Y gastric bypass is both a restrictive and a malabsorptive procedure. First the stomach is divided, creating a very small gastric pouch. This limits the amount of food that can be eaten. The rest of the stomach is left in the abdomen and attached to the first part of the intestine. Then a new connection is made between the small stomach pouch and the intestine. This allows food to bypass part of the intestine and therefore limit the absorption of food by the body.
