

Psychology 111: Introduction to Psychology
Study Guide for Chapter 9 – Lifespan Development

1. Know the research methods that are commonly used in developmental psychology.
2. What are developmental milestones, be able to give some examples at all stages of life.
3. Know the "important issues" for developmental psychologists.
4. Be familiar with the theories of development.
5. Know the stages of prenatal development and what occurs at each.
6. What factors can influence prenatal development?
7. How do identical twins "come about"?
8. What can newborns do? Are they cognitively devoid of any abilities?
9. What happens to the brain in early development and how does it relate to early memories?
10. Does motor development proceed in a certain sequences?
11. What did the stage concept mean for Piaget? Piaget's ideas are pretty important, I think, so this is an important section of the chapter. Know the stages and what children can do at each.
12. What is a schema? What is cognition? How does assimilation differ from accommodation?
13. The text lists the stages of development, and you should learn those as well as the processes that occur within each stage, such as object permanence, conservation, egocentrism, and "theory of mind."
14. How do psychologists feel about Piaget's theory today?
15. In terms of attachment theory, know the things that are important in producing attachment (body contact, familiarity, responsive parenting). And what happens if people are deprived of attachment? The classic Harlow studies are important.
16. What do we mean by self-concept? How does it develop?
