

Importing Photos for the First Time

Before editing and improving your photos with Lightroom Classic, you need to import them into the program's database. Depending on the size of your collection this could take a while, so it's best to set aside some time.

1 The first step after installing Lightroom Classic for the first time is to import your photos into the program's catalogue. Lightroom uses this catalogue to organise your photo collection and to help you find them by applying keywords and other search criteria. By keeping a separate database it means that the files on your hard drive are not affected.

3 On the next screen, you'll see a message saying 'Please select a source'. In the upper left you'll see a list of the storage devices attached to your system. If you want to import photos from some other source, such as a USB flash drive, you need to plug it in now. Lightroom will add it to the drive list as soon as it's detected.

2 When you open Lightroom for the first time, you'll see a blank screen with the words 'No photo source selected' in the middle. To get started with importing your photos, take a look in the bottom left corner. You should see a button labeled 'Import'. Click on this and you'll be taken to a new screen to begin the import process.

4 Click on the drive that contains the folder from which you wish to import your images and you should see all the folders on that drive displayed in the file-tree on the left of the screen. Navigate to the correct folder and click on it. Lightroom will immediately begin searching that folder for image files, including any sub-folders.
