This method for identifying a single subject as a responder to a therapy involving a drug agent is based on the fact that the drug concentration in the blood is a function of the dose administered. A single subject who responds to a therapy involving a drug agent will show a change in the drug concentration in the blood which is proportional to the change in the dose administered. A single subject who does not respond to a therapy involving a drug agent will show no change in the drug concentration in the blood.
