

Questions 33 – 40 are based on the following passage:

If you visit Chiang Mai, make a point to visit the marketplace, for that is where you can get North Thailand's exotic delicacies – and the most exotic are bugs! Yes. Bugs! Deep-fried, salad and ready to be served just like how French fries are eaten in Malaysia.

There are various kinds of bugs. They have bamboo worms, which are the most popular among the bugs, crickets, grasshoppers, male crickets, butterfly larvae and several unrecognisable insects. According to the Thais, these bugs are rich in protein. They are not widely sold but if one looks hard enough, one can find them at certain corners of the market. The bamboo worm is more popular because it is widely sold and neatly packed in air-tight plastic containers, presumably for tourists to take home as souvenirs.

Some locals prefer the bamboo worms raw but it is quite tasteless. The fried stuff is a different story altogether. If you are not looking at what you are putting into your mouth, you would not be able to guess you are eating a bug. But if you look at it and put it in your mouth, you would be conscious of the flickers tickling the roof of your mouth and this may make you want to throw up. The Thais swear that it is a nutritious food rich in protein although not commonly eaten like chicken in this predominantly Buddhist nation.

The other bugs, apart from bamboo worms, are sold loosely, costing about RM2 or 20 bahts for five grammes. The bugs are caught from the rice fields where they thrive in abundance. The rice fields are mostly found on the outskirts of Chiang Mai. The farmers hunt for these bugs during the non-harvesting season to earn extra cash.
