■ Accounting for the unknown: The most common accounting method for the unknown is the "cost of sales" method, which is based on the assumption that the cost of the goods sold is the same as the cost of the goods available for sale. This method is used when the cost of the goods sold is not known at the time of sale, but it is known at the time of the end of the period. The cost of the goods sold is then calculated as the cost of the goods available for sale minus the cost of the goods ending inventory.
