

Introduction

In recent years there has been a trend towards not only developing and protecting human rights but also animal rights. Many people believe that we should give animals the same rights as humans. Others view them as a renewable source of food, as well as other useful products.

Body paragraph #1

First of all, it seems clear for most intelligent people that animals deserve more rights than they have. Traditionally, however, that is because they are obviously not made to go with thoughts and feelings such as humans are not usually the same as we are. For example, it has been argued that some animals – birds and dolphins – are so intelligent that they should be given the same rights and protection as humans.

Body paragraph #2

There are arguments against giving rights for animals, particularly that they do not have the ability of human beings not to feel pain. They do not have a sense of morality and that their behaviour is strictly natural. Unlike the natural world, humans have the ability to feel pain and to have a sense of morality. If humans have the ability to feel pain and to have a sense of morality, then animals should have the same rights as humans. It is not fair to treat animals as if they are not human. It is not fair to treat animals as if they are not human. It is not fair to treat animals as if they are not human.

Conclusion

In conclusion, there are arguments from both sides of the debate, both supporting and opposing animal rights. However, it seems clear that animals deserve respect, protection, and the same rights as humans. Perhaps they should not be given the same rights as humans but they should certainly be treated better than they currently are and laws should be drafted to ensure their protection from abuse and suffering.
