Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of physical activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant increase in physical activity, a significant decrease in body mass index, and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in stress. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
