

These authors demonstrate that the use of a computerized system to monitor and control the environment of a laboratory can significantly reduce the risk of contamination and improve the quality of the data.

But the results indicate a need for more of these services, "in order to allow them to be used more extensively," says the study's author, Richard L. Kane, MD, PhD, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. "The results suggest that the current system of care is not meeting the needs of the population."

There is no doubt a strong correlation between the number of people who have been vaccinated and the number of people who have died from the disease.

For a complete summary of the findings from the study, see the report at <http://www.oxford-journals.org/doi/full/10.1093/oxfordjournals.oxfam.a004202>.

With the SPARC Scalable Processor ARChitecture architecture and system software as the underlying foundation, Sun Microsystems is delivering a new model of computing: easy workgroup computing to enhance the way people work, automating processes across groups, departments, and teams locally and globally. Sun and a large and growing number of companies in the computer industry have embarked on a new approach to meet the needs of computer users and system developers in the 1990s. Originated by Sun, the approach targets users who need a range of compatible computer systems with a variety of application software and want the option to buy those systems from a choice of vendors. The approach also meets the needs of system developers to be part of a broad, growing market of compatible systems and software developers who need to design products quickly and cost-effectively. The SPARC approach ensures that computer systems can be easy to use for all classes of users and members of the workgroup: end users, system administrators, and software developers. For the end user, the SPARC technologies facilitate system set-up and the daily use of various applications. For the system administrator, supporting the computer installation, setting up, and monitoring the network are easier. For the software developer, there are advanced development tools and support. Furthermore, the features of the SPARC hardware and software technologies ensure that SPARC systems and applications play an important role in the years to come. Fire Management, 1952 Standard Handbook of Industrial Automation Douglas M. Considine, Glenn D. Considine, 2012-12-06 The authors and editors of this Handbook have attempted to fill a serious gap in the professional literature on industrial automation. Much past attention has been directed to the general concepts and philosophy of automation as a way to convince owners and managers of manufacturing facilities that automation is indeed one of the few avenues available to increase productivity and improve competitive position. Seventy-three contributors share their knowledge in this Handbook. Less attention has been given to the What and How of automation. To the extent feasible and practical within the confines of the pages allowed, this Handbook concentrates on the implementation of automation. Once the Go signal has been given by management, concrete details, not broad definitions and philosophical discussions, are required. To be found in this distinctly different book in the field are detailed parameters for designing and specifying equipment the options available with an evaluation of their relative advantages and limitations and insights for engineers and production managers on the operation and capabilities of present generation automation system components subsystems and total systems In a number of instances the logical extension of current technology into the future is given A total of 445 diagrams and photos and 57 tables augments detailed discussions In addition to its use as a ready reference for technical and management personnel the book has wide potential for training and group discussions at the college and university level and for special education programs as may be provided by consultants or by in house training personnel
