

Farewell to Isolation

The "Lusitania" preparing to dock in New York.

With American trade becoming more and more logjammed toward the Allied cause, many feared that it was only a matter of time before the United States would be at war. The issue that propelled most Americans into action to side with the British was German submarine warfare.

The British, with the world's largest navy, had effectively shut down German maritime trade. Because there was no hope of catching the British in numbers of ships, the Germans felt that the submarine was their only key to survival. One "U-boat" could inexpensively sink many battle ships, only to slip away unseen. This practice would stop only if the British would lift their blockade.

Sinking the Lusitania

The isolationist American public had little concern if the British and Germans tangled on the high seas. The incident that changed everything was the sinking of the Lusitania. The Germans felt they had done their part to warn Americans about the danger of overseas travel.

The German government purchased advertisement space in American newspapers warning that Americans who traveled on ships carrying war contraband risked submarine attack. When the Lusitania departed New York, the Germans believed the massive passenger ship was loaded with munitions in its cargo hold. On May 7, 1915, a German U-boat torpedoed the ship without warning, sending 1,198 passengers, including 128 Americans, to its watery grave. The Lusitania, as it turned out, was carrying over 4 million rounds of ammunition.

Lusitania History Society

The sinking of the British ship RMS Lusitania in 1915 helped turn American public opinion away from neutrality. Nearly 1200 citizens lost their lives in the German torpedo attack, 119 of them Americans.

President Wilson was enraged. The British were breaking the rules, but the Germans were causing deaths.

Wilson's Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan, recommended a ban on American travel on any ships of nations at war. Wilson performed a tightrope line against the German Kaiser: he demanded an immediate end to submarine warfare, prompting Bryan to resign in protest. The Germans began a 2-year practice of pledging to cease submarine attacks, reneging on that pledge, and coming it again under U.S. protest.
