Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40 to 50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and a training group. The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, three times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group did not participate in any exercise program. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period using a variety of tests, including a maximal aerobic capacity test, a submaximal aerobic capacity test, and a series of strength and endurance tests. Health was measured using a series of questionnaires that assessed lifestyle factors, such as diet, smoking, and alcohol consumption, as well as physiological factors, such as blood pressure, heart rate, and cholesterol levels. The results of the study showed that the training group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and better health outcomes than the control group at the end of the 12-week period. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
