Structural change is a process in which the amount of labour capital and land dedicated to agriculture and other sectors changes over time In this study we focus on the cases of Peru and Nicaragua using their two most recently administered agricultural censuses The agricultural censuses permit us to identify dimensions and information available to study the process of structural change in Latin America over the last 20 years The study includes a comparative analysis and policy recommendations based on the two most recent agricultural censuses administered in Nicaragua 2001 and 2011 and Peru 1994 and 2012 Processing and analysing information from these censuses contribute to identifying dimensions and information available to study the process of structural change in Latin America over the last 20 years Evidence based policymaking is increasingly more at the core of the United Nations and member countries activity In the case of FAO this type of study is crucial to build the knowledge body on which projects and activities are carried forward The Hand in Hand HiH initiative is a key example in this context as it aims at quantitatively identifying high impact and high agricultural potential areas in which to invest within developing countries As Nicaragua and Peru are HiH s target countries this study will show very useful to learn about their recent experiences in agricultural transformations Annals of Tropical

Research ,1989 Standard Industrial Classification Manual United States. Bureau of the Budget. Division of Statistical Standards,United States. Bureau of the Budget,1941 American Mirror Roberto Saba,2024-12-17 How slave emancipation transformed capitalism in the United States and Brazil In the nineteenth century the United States and Brazil were the largest slave societies in the Western world The former enslaved approximately four million people the latter nearly two million Slavery was integral to the production of agricultural commodities for the global market and governing elites feared the system s demise would ruin their countries Yet when slavery ended in the United States and Brazil in 1865 and 1888 respectively what resulted was immediate and continuous economic progress In American Mirror Roberto Saba investigates how American and Brazilian reformers worked together to ensure that slave emancipation would advance the interests of capital Saba explores the methods through which antislavery reformers fostered capitalist development in a transnational context From the 1850s to the 1880s this coalition of Americans and Brazilians which included diplomats engineers entrepreneurs journalists merchants missionaries planters politicians scientists and students among others consolidated wage labor as the dominant production system in their countries These reformers were not romantic humanitarians but cosmopolitan modernizers who worked together to promote labor saving machinery new transportation technology scientific management and technical education They successfully used such innovations to improve production and increase trade Challenging commonly held ideas about slavery and its demise in the Western Hemisphere American Mirror illustrates the crucial role of slave emancipation in the making of capitalism Cocoa and Coffee Fermentations Rosane F.
