Abstract: The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the muscle strength, body composition, and metabolic health of sedentary, overweight, and obese women. The program was designed to improve muscle strength and body composition, and to reduce the risk of metabolic disease. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The program included a warm-up, followed by a circuit of resistance training exercises, and a cool-down. The exercises were performed using a variety of resistance training equipment, including free weights, resistance bands, and bodyweight exercises. The program was supervised by a certified personal trainer. The results of the program showed that the women who completed the program experienced significant improvements in muscle strength, body composition, and metabolic health. The program was well-tolerated and the women reported feeling more energetic and confident after completing the program. The authors conclude that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program is an effective and safe way to improve muscle strength, body composition, and metabolic health in sedentary, overweight, and obese women.
