

Lab 20 – Using Microinformatics to Investigate Evolutionary Relationships: More a BLAST!

Introduction:

Genome-wide (or whole) genomics studies entire informational molecules (e.g. genomes) of the Human Genome Project, some also including and analyzing 20,000 or 25,000 genes that define a human being. The project also systematically mapped the genomes of other species, including the fruit fly, mouse and Drosophila, etc. The project also includes sequencing of the genomes of other animals, plants and microorganisms (bacteria, archaea, fungi, etc.) and their genomes.

Why is this information important? Being able to identify the precise location and sequence of human genes (or other genes) makes understanding genetic diseases, for instance, finding other mutations of genes in other species helps us understand evolutionary relationships among organisms. Many of our genes are identical or similar to those found in other species.

Remember your laboratory project that investigated the evolutionary disease in fruit flies. Is this same gene function identical? Does it have similar effects? It should take you really, really, really, really through the entire human genome to try to locate this same sequence of bases as that in that fly. This difficulty can be solved, via sophisticated technological methods as needed.

Microinformatics is a field that combines statistics, mathematical modeling, and computer-assisted analysis biological data. Using microinformatics methods, entire genomes can be quickly compared (usually to obtain genetic similarities and differences). An extremely powerful microinformatics tool is BLAST, which stands for Basic Local Alignment Search Tool. Using BLAST, you can input a gene sequence or protein sequence and obtain genes (or proteins) that are identical or similar sequences or a similar alignment.

In this investigation, you will use BLAST to compare similarities and differences information as measured in alignments. An alignment (also called homologous gene) is an evolutionary relationship representation of species. Figure 1 below depicts a typical alignment.

Note that this alignment is identical with homologous and evolutionary relationship as specific species. The other two are species and evolution to which other, non-homologous, they share common ancestor.
