Psycholinguistics the field of science that examines the mental processes and knowledge structures involved in the acquisition comprehension and production of language had a strong monolingual orientation during the first four decades following its emergence around 1950. The awareness that a large part of mankind speaks more than one language that this may impact both on the way each individual language is used and on the thought processes of bilinguals and multilinguals and that consequently our theories on human linguistic ability and its role in non linguistic cognition are incomplete and perhaps false has led to a steep growth of studies on bilingualism and multilingualism since around 1995. This textbook introduces the reader to the field of study that examines language acquisition comprehension and production from the perspective of the bilingual and multilingual speaker. It furthermore provides an introduction to studies that investigate the implications of being bilingual on various aspects of non linguistic cognition. The major topics covered are the development of language in children growing up in a bilingual environment either from birth or relatively soon after late foreign language learning and word recognition sentence comprehension speech production and translation processes in bilinguals. Furthermore the ability of bilinguals and multilinguals to generally produce language in the intended language is discussed as is the cognitive machinery that enables this. Finally the consequences of bilingualism and multilingualism for non linguistic cognition and findings and views regarding the biological basis of bilingualism and multilingualism are presented. The textbook's primary readership are students and researchers in Cognitive Psychology Linguistics and Applied Linguistics but teachers of language and translators and interpreters who wish to become better informed on the cognitive and biological basis of bilingualism and multilingualism will also benefit from it.

Effectiveness of Online Marketing Campaigns Sebastian Klapdor, 2013-02-19. Internet advertising has come of age yet little is known in research and practice about how digital channel advertising really works. The empirical research in this thesis intends to fill this gap and shed light on the effectiveness of online advertising. Two studies are conducted that focus on multichannel online advertising and search engine advertising the single most important online ad channel. In an interdisciplinary approach both studies first develop comprehensive theoretical models based on existing work in related research fields for example marketing and information retrieval. This approach pays off and leads to new and insightful findings. There are synergies in multichannel online advertising purchase propensity increases when consumers receive advertising messages through multiple channels. The channel order can influence the conversion probability. Click through rates in search engine advertising are influenced through various keyword criteria on semantic and syntactic level. The results of this thesis constitute an important starting point for future research in online advertising.

Furthermore the results enable practitioners to improve the effectiveness of online advertising through a more differentiated campaign management approach Based on its findings the thesis outlines how a future integrated approach to online advertising could look like
