Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program. The control group did not exercise. The subjects were assessed for physical fitness at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results of the study showed that the exercise group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness than the control group at 12 weeks. The exercise group had significantly higher levels of cardiovascular fitness, muscular fitness, and flexibility than the control group. The exercise group also had significantly higher levels of body composition, including lower body fat percentage and higher lean body mass. The control group had no significant changes in physical fitness. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can improve the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Epigenetic clock: measurements that estimate cell age, phenotype, gene expression and longevity are contained within a single DNA molecule, so that the entire genome can be used to estimate age. The epigenetic clock is based on the fact that certain CpG sites are methylated in a predictable manner as a function of age. The epigenetic clock is a powerful tool for studying aging and disease.
