WHAT NEEDS A REFERENCE?

Students often struggle with when and how to document outside materials they incorporate into research papers. The rules are new and sometimes confusing when first encountered. To provide some practice applying the principles, here are some examples that are at the same time familiar, perhaps a tad bit funny, and very instructive.

Rules

1. Do not document:
 1. Your own ideas about what you read
 2. Minor details
 3. Your own editorializing
2. Do document:
 1. All quotations
 2. All paraphrases
 3. All ideas you learned from someone else
 4. Facts from the reading that you are using to make an argument concerning how to interpret the text
