

INSTRUCTIONS:

Complete the sections IN ORDER. Follow the step-by-step directions listed in each section. Record answers to questions in italics on the Data Sheet. Label organs marked in bold on the diagram on the back of the data sheet. Please do not write on direction sheets.

PART A: External Structures

1. Look at the underside of your fetal pig. The most noticeable tube-like structure located at the mid-section of the pig's torso is the umbilical cord. After birth, the umbilical cord drops off. What is the name of the sac that remains on the abdomen after the umbilical cord falls off?
2. Determine the sex of your pig. The female will have a urogenital opening just ventral (in front of) to the anus, immediately underneath the tail. The male will have a urogenital opening just posterior (in back of) to the umbilical cord. Although small sacs containing the testicles may be found, they are NOT always present at this stage of development. What sex is your pig?
3. Locate the mammary papillae. These are the nipples on the abdomen. They are present in both male and female pigs. How many papillae are there on your pig? What is the eventual function of these papillae on a female pig?

PART B: Preparing for Dissection

1. You will be dissecting and observing the internal organs system by system. DO NOT REMOVE ANY ORGAN UNTIL INSTRUCTED TO DO SO. Take care not to damage any structures when locating and dissecting other structures.
2. Place the fetal pig in the dissecting pan ventrally (belly-side up). To secure the pig for dissection, tie one end of twine securely around one wrist of the pig. Loop the twine under the dissecting pan and tie it to the other wrist. Repeat this procedure with the ankles. Make sure both strings are tight so the arms and legs stay apart.
3. Begin the dissection of the abdominal cavity by making incisions with your scissors as shown in the diagram. Start at the "X" above the umbilical cord and cut in the direction of the arrows. Cut through the skin and muscle tissue, but be aware of the depth you are cutting! Always pull the tissue up and cut upward, not downward, as to not injure the underlying organs.
4. After making the cuts, the side tissues should be loose enough to simply bend them aside. At this time, you will need to adjust the tension on the twine holding the pig's arms and legs.

PART C: The Digestive System

1. Find the large, multi-lobed, reddish-brown liver at the anterior end (top) of the abdominal cavity. How many lobes does it have? Label the liver.
2. Under the liver is the stomach, a large pouch-like organ with two parts. What is the function of the stomach? IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO LOOK IN THE STOMACH DO IT NOW! Label the stomach.
3. Posterior to the stomach is the small intestine. Label the small intestine. Follow the small intestine to where it enlarges becoming the large intestine, somewhere in the middle of the tubing. It may be difficult to locate the connection between the two intestines. However, if you locate a small pouch, the caecum (same as your appendix), you will find the large intestine. NOW YOU WILL TAKE OUT AND MEASURE THE INTESTINES.
4. If you look carefully at the intestines, you will notice a thin, transparent tissue around them, called the mesentery. What do you think is the function of the mesentery? Label the mesentery.
5. The large intestine continues and enlarges, forming the rectum. Label the rectum.
