

Diagram of a greenhouse showing how light rays are reflected back into the interior, warming the space.

Greenhouse Effect
The greenhouse effect is a process by which solar radiation enters the Earth's atmosphere as shortwave radiation and is absorbed by the Earth's surface. The surface then radiates energy back out as longwave radiation. Greenhouse gases in the atmosphere absorb some of this outgoing radiation and re-radiate it in all directions, including back toward the Earth's surface. This process warms the planet and makes life possible.

The greenhouse effect is a natural process that warms the Earth's surface. When the Sun's rays hit the Earth, they heat the land and water. The land and water then radiate the heat back out into the atmosphere as longwave radiation. Greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, such as carbon dioxide and water vapor, absorb some of this outgoing radiation and re-radiate it back toward the Earth's surface. This process is called the greenhouse effect and it is what keeps the Earth warm enough for life to exist.
