Introduction

Plants and fungi will grow in a range of conditions. Some organisms, plants and fungi, can sense and respond to light, contact with soil, water, and chemical cues. These all are not enough for organisms to grow, however, they all do play a role in the development and survival of plants and fungi in their environments.

Plants produce hormones to coordinate growth of their roots and shoots so that they can reach the resources that they require to survive. These growth hormones control the direction in which and where roots and shoots grow. The shoot grows up and out of the soil to get as much sunlight as it can for photosynthesis.

A shoot will grow up and out of the soil and towards light and a root will grow down and out of the soil towards water.

Plants and fungi develop responses to grow towards light, shoot and root towards the source of growth and growth away from it. These are the conditions light, shoot and root towards light.

Plants and fungi develop responses to grow away from light, shoot and root away from the source of growth and growth away from it. These are the conditions light, shoot and root away from light.

In this practical, you will see the effect of light on the growth of a shoot and root towards light.

Application of Network Theoretic Approaches in Biology Rinku Sharma,Josh Clevenger,Mallana Gowdra Mallikarjuna,Sudeepto Bhattacharya,Manish Kumar Pandey,2023-08-25 The biological complexity essentially includes and involves processes that are mediated through explicitly non linear interactions that are often typically entangled in nature These comprise a myriad of interactions among a vast number of entities such as genes proteins metabolites and species widely varying in scale These interactions render biological systems across spatial and temporal scales as complex adaptive systems having features like self organisation modularity emergence non linear interactions collective response and adaptation The theory of complex networks offers an appropriate formal framework for modelling such complex systems The enormous wealth of biological data generated by high throughput techniques as also through empirical investigations can be analysed using the aforementioned formal framework to obtain important insights into biological complexity The concept of networks can be used 1 to explore the relationships between entities resulting in network generation 2 to guide the analytic procedure based on existing network s as prior knowledge and 3 to analyze the prior network s regarding their topology and attributes Complex networks being ubiquitous permeate the biological systems across spatial and temporal scales The objective of this collection is to highlight some very salient features of such inherent complexity in biological systems by adopting a network theoretic perspective The anticipated pay off is obtaining a deeper insight explicitly into the systems level interactions and the emergent complex behaviour of the systems Also investigating the propulsive forces which lend various networks with akin topological characteristics that would help to merge vivid information related to various molecular interactions into a single framework thereby permitting a structural perspective of the cellular dynamics The application may include exploring the disease environmental stress response and trait mechanism using different omics platforms candidate gene discovery and validation network guided discovery and deployment of omics approaches in biology modern genetic improvement methods for delivering genes in addition to high throughput and precise phenotyping methodologies exploring the disease environmental stress response mechanism marker re prioritization network guided biomarker discovery etc

Plants' Responses to Novel Environmental Pressures Alessio Fini, Massimiliano Tattini, Raquel Esteban, 2018-02-01 Plants have been exposed to multiple environmental stressors on long term seasonal and short term daily basis since their appearance on land However the frequency and the intensity of stress events have increased much during the last three decades because of climate change Plants have developed however a multiplicity of modular and highly integrated strategies to cope with challenges imposed by novel usually harsher environments These strategies include migration acclimation and adaptation Twelve articles in this research topic exactly focus on the relative significance of these response mechanisms for the successful acclimation of plants to a wide range of novel environmental pressures Four articles additionally explore how plants respond to severe stress conditions resulting from the concurrent action of multiple stressors Ten articles mostly examine how morpho anatomical physiological and biochemical related traits integrate when plants suffer from novel threats such as solid gaseous and electromagnetic pollutants Suitable physiological indicators for developing conservation strategies are described in the last two works This research topic highlights that bottom up as well as top down approaches will be necessary to develop in near future in the study of plants responses to environmental pressures Guide to the Study of
