Communists Triumph in China

Mao's Communism

Mao distributed land among the peasants and encouraged them to kill tens of thousands of landowners and businessmen. The peasants now enjoyed a higher standard of living, but Mao set up a dictatorship that denied basic human rights.

Schools were built and literacy increased. Medical facilities and health care were also introduced. Women gained equality with men, no longer had to bind their feet, and joined the workforce. However, women were still paid less than men.

The Great Leap Forward

Great Leap Forward – program begun in 1958 by Mao Zedong to increase agricultural and industrial output in China.

Mao created communes, or groups of people who live and work together and collectively own the land. Communes had production quotas, or set amounts of goods they had to produce.

The typical commune included several villages, thousands of acres of land, and up to 25,000 people. It had its own schools, factories, housing and dining halls.

The Great Leap Forward failed because commune-based industries produced poor quality goods. Agricultural output also declined and widespread famine led to the deaths of over 30 million people.

The Cultural Revolution

Cultural Revolution – program launched in 1966 by Mao Zedong to renew loyalty to communism and purge China of non-revolutionary trends.

By 1966 Mao feared the country was no longer being run by his revolutionary peasantry leaders but by bourgeois intellectuals, so he closed schools and urged students to experience the revolution for themselves.

To renew people's loyalty to his communist dictatorship Mao organized a massive propaganda campaign.
