THE COUNTERCULTURE
What characterized the counterculture?

During the 1960s many idealistic young people adopted values that differed from those of mainstream society. These Americans were part of a movement known as the counterculture.

The movement was made up mostly of white middle-class youths. Members of the counterculture were known as “hippies.” Many hippies shared some of the beliefs of the New Left. They were disillusioned with mainstream society. They did not approve of the way American society supported materialism and technology. They also had very different ideas about war. A majority of hippies chose to turn their backs on America. They wanted to establish a new society based on peace and love.

Characteristics of the hippie culture included rock 'n' roll, unusual clothes, and the use of illegal drugs — in particular, marijuana and a new hallucinogenic drug called LSD. They typically wore jeans, tie-dyed T-shirts, and love beads. Many grew long hair, which conservative adults saw as being disrespectful. Many chose to live in large groups called communes. Many hippies moved to San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury. This community was popular because of the availability of drugs.

After a few years, the counterculture movement began to decline. Some aspects of the movement became violent. Many urban communes grew dangerous. The widespread use of drugs also led to the decline of the movement.

More than anything else, hippies eventually found that they could not survive outside mainstream America. They needed money to live. For many, this meant returning to mainstream society.
