

Guidelines for writing a Review Article

- A) Good to know about review articles
- B) Elements of a review article
- C) Guidelines for preparing a review article in 18 steps
- D) Examples of high-quality review articles in the plant sciences (to be used in your own work)
- E) References used in this Guideline

A) Good to know about review articles

What is a review article?

- A critical, constructive analysis of the literature in a specific field through summary, classification, analysis, comparison.
- A scientific text relying on previously published literature or data. New data from the author's experiments are not presented (with exceptions: some reviews contain new data).
- A stand-alone publication. Literature reviews as integral parts of master theses, doctoral theses or grant proposals will not be considered here. However, many tips in this guideline are transferable to these text types.

What is the function of a review article?

- to organize literature
- to evaluate literature
- to identify patterns and trends in the literature
- to synthesize literature
- to identify research gaps and recommend new research areas

Who is the audience of review articles?

- experts in specific research areas
- students or novice researchers
- decision-makers

Review articles targeted at the last two groups: Extended explanations of subjects or of subject-specific language are mandatory (e.g. through the uses of information boxes or glossaries).

Which types of review articles exist?

Types by methodological approach

- Narrative review
Selected studies are compared and summarized on the basis of the author's experience, existing theories and models. Results are based on a qualitative rather than a quantitative level.
- Best evidence review
A focus on selected studies is combined with systematic methods of study-selection and result exploration.
- Systematic review
Findings from various individual studies are analyzed statistically by strict procedures. Meta-Analyses are used to pool the results of individual studies.
