First we must understand what happiness is. Most would describe it as an emotional state of well-being distinguished by positive emotions. How do experiences vs.. Material possessions affect ones happiness? Many people tend to believe that money can buy happiness, but others believe that experiences are much more appealing and pleasing when it comes to happiness and would rather go on a vacation or to a concert than have a large house or fast car. It's true that going to a concert does cost money but not the kind of money needed to buy a house or car.

Myers (2000) found that an "estimate that only 10 to 15 percent of Americans think Of homeless as truly happy" (56). Does this mean that America as a country is not collectively happy? Or are these self-evaluations incorrect? We need to find out why Americans do not find themselves as truly happy. Some would say that it is because we expect material possessions and money to bring us happiness. I think that when the phrase money can buy happiness is used, it is meant by the use of money when buying large material items such as a car or a house.

Writing A Final Draft Essay

Once we got to the concert we moved to an area where there weren't many people just talking and having fun in between Jake Owen and Jason Alden, when this lady came up to us and asked if we wanted floor seats. All we had to do is give her our old tickets and she would give us floor seats. None of us could believe it. We were so close to the stage you could see the sweat dripping off the guitarists face. Obviously we didn't pay the money to get the best tickets but either way, we were able to have fun when we were up in the stands and also down on the floor. Hint that most people would rather spend their money on this type of experience, than they would on a car. I, personally would rather drive my old truck and be able to go to concerts and have experiences like that at the Jason Alden concert. In this case, money was used and the result was a good experience and a memory that will last a lifetime. Money can increase OR decrease happiness, depending on how it is used (Myers 2000, 59). This can mean that mo
